

ACTION WORDS

The teacher takes the children out to the field. She tells them to do what they like. Some are playing, some are sitting in groups, some are running, dancing and talking. A few children are also seen picking things from the ground while a few are just standing and watching people, animals or things around them.

The teacher takes the children back to class and happily tells them that all of them had been busy doing something.

So when we do or say things, they are called action words.
